Report on the Event

On 4th January, 2021, the National Service Scheme (NSS) unit of Rajagiri Viswajyothi College of Arts and Applied Sciences, Vengoor, spearheaded an impactful door-to-door awareness campaign focused on the detrimental effects of plastic misuse. The campaign aimed to educate local residents on the severe environmental consequences of plastic pollution, emphasizing its disruption of ecological balance, contribution to atmospheric contamination, and long-term effects on both wildlife and human health.

During the campaign, volunteers engaged residents in informative discussions about how plastic waste endangers natural habitats and species. They highlighted the ways in which plastic pollution contributes to the release of toxic substances into the atmosphere. The volunteers also addressed the health hazards posed by plastic waste, which can leach harmful chemicals into soil and water sources, impacting human health and safety. Residents were encouraged to adopt sustainable practices such as using reusable cloth bags, avoiding single-use plastics, and properly segregating waste for recycling. The campaign also served as an educational opportunity for the participating students, who gained valuable experience. The success of this initiative is reflected in the increased environmental awareness among the local residents and their willingness to adopt eco-friendly habits. By empowering both students and residents to take action against plastic pollution, the campaign has contributed to the broader goal of creating a more sustainable and environmentally conscious society.

On August 21, 2020, the National Service Scheme (NSS) conducted a COVID-19 Awareness Campaign in association with Rayamangalam Panchayath. The event aimed to address crucial aspects of health and well-being amidst the pandemic. The primary objective of the campaign was to raise awareness about COVID-19, focusing on its prevention, symptoms, and treatment. With a significant number of residents participating, the session covered key topics including how the virus spreads, recognizing symptoms, and steps to take if infected.
